Rising Tide

Twenty years ago Krieger Watch produced the first Tidal chronometer, which had a function allowing it to indicate the state of the tide and whether it was rising or falling. Now Krieger has unveiled the second-generation Tide Watch. The new watch is built for the modern consumer, with its rugged construction and substantial 44mm case. The watch can be submerged nearly a half-mile in water, and has screw-down push buttons and crown. And, of course, it also comes with the tidal function.

Available on a stainless steel bracelet and rubber strap, the Tide Watch retails for $1,795 on a strap and $2,195 on a bracelet.

Smokin'

The new watch firm Bozeman Watch Company, from Bozeman, Montana, now makes the official watch of the National Smokejumper Association. Smokejumpers are firefighters who take the ultimate risk, parachuting out of planes and into forest fires. This new watch is a chronograph that measures 45mm in diameter and is crafted in steel. The Smokejumper Chronograph will be limited to just one hundred pieces. Retail price: $3,900
